

On the index page, Firefox, which is my default web browser, has a much wider view than in Chrome or in brave. The rest of the content on the homepage has not been changed due to the difference in width between the browsers. The font I choose, Segoe UI, seems to be supported by all the browsers I tested and is displayed properly. The links all appear uniform across the browsers I tested. The form elements are where there is a bit of a deviation. In Firefox, the preferred contact section is just a bit different. The email and phone text is slightly less bold, and the circles are slightly less dark. Everything else appears the same, including the colors, font, and other form elements across the web browsers I tested.
